Cuts don't make economic sense and risk making things worse

- The economy depends on a healthy public sector. For every £1 earned by a public service worker, 70p goes back into their local economy.
- We can afford public services if everyone pays their fair share. The 100 richest people are worth £330 billion and their wealth has increased by 30% on the last year. £330 billion is enough to clear the deficit – twice over.
- The private sector depends on the public sector. For every one public service job lost, at least one will be lost in the private sector.
- We are not “all in this together”. The poorest families will be hit by government cuts FIVE times worse than the richest.
- After the war the deficit was at least three times higher than it is now, yet we built the NHS and the Welfare State.
